Fish Poor Substitute

Fish is not as good a meat substitute as many people believe for while it seems less heavy, it is not less likely to form objectionable acids, but milk, milk products, and eggs are good things to use instead of so much meat. A quart of milk or 8 or 9 eggs has about as high a food value as a pound of the best steak, but on most markets will cost much less. Other wholesome fishes which should be used to take the place of meat are soups, cottage cheese, cream sauces, variously flavored puddings made of milk and cereal of different kinds, and countless other economical, nutritious, easily digested dishes which any good housewife knows how to prepare.
